Sitting in a nearly empty Sentae chamber, John Sherman Cooper, Republican of Kentucky, showed little emotion as his colleagues praised him for two and one-half hours to mark his announced retirement as a legislator. Mike Mansfield, the Democratic leader, said he hoped the 71-year-old Senator would be hired in some capacity next year "if the present Administration is returned to power." Senator George D. Aiken, Republican of Vermont, predicted that Senator Cooper would be back working in Washington, "one way or another." The retiring Senator said, "I know this body will continue to search for the truth."
